

RADAG launches education initiative under CSR drive
Financial Chronicle (7/19/2008)

Anil Dhirubhai Ambani Group firm Reliance Life Insurance today launched a project 'School on Wheels', for providing access to basic education to underprivileged children as part of its corporate social responsibility endeavor. 'School on Wheels', was launched in association with Project Crayon, an NGO focused on Child Rights and Youth Development and was inaugurated by Tina Ambani here today. "Our vision is to provide access to basic education to underprivileged children and open their eyes to their own potential and the world that awaits them," Ambani said. The mobile school would cater to the slums in and around Chembur and Mankhurd in the first phase. The bus, customized to function as a school, is fully equipped with a computer and library, and has dedicated teachers. It would cover a few selected slum areas and would run a three-hour class at each of these centres, the company said in a release.
